L.B.R.-W (Lower Bowel Repair) - An ideal formula for the bowel would contain an "industrial strength" cleaner such as Greasewood (Chaparral) which can penetrate old mucus and hardened waste in bowel pockets. Greasewood does this without harming intestinal linings. A toner would draw a ballooning and/or pocketed bowel back into shape and action. Barberry and White Oak Bark do just that. Because the bowel has a very meager nervous system, compared to other areas of the body, a "jump start" for its battery would be provided. In other words, a spark of a stimulant to get a "lazy bowel" going is a must. Bitter Orange does this. Angelica rids the body of "gas". Marshmallow and Butcher's Broom can be employed to soothe any "cleansing irritation" and to rapidly heal the area. Occasionally during cleansing, some blood is seen in the stool as a sharp piece of "bowel rock" breaks loose or irritating wastes leave the bowel, or if a cyst opens up and bleeds clean. Marshmallow and Butcher's Broom rebuild the intestines with their healing touch. As the layers of old waste material peel off, some of this passes out as a liquid, some as solids and some turns directly to various types of repulsive gases. Hence, Angelica can be there to relieve and prevent gas discomfort. Senna is a laxative herb for dissolving and removal of hardened trash, as well as normal movements. Senna keeps the wastes, the poisons, bacteria, fungus, viruses etc., that were locked up in the hardened wastes, moving. If there were no laxative herb in the formula, then these tormenters could make a person sick as they are set free with the dissolved wastes. This is where the confusion occurs when you take an herb such as Greasewood and people say it caused hepatitis. It did not and it does not. When a dissolving herb or and antibiotic herb is taken, then a laxative herb must be there right along with it to get the germs, viruses, fungus, etc. out of the body so they won't hang around and overwhelm the antibiotic effect and make a person sick. A good bowel repair formula would also contain a digestaid to digest out chronic disagreeable material. L.B.R.-W has all of these.
